Calling All Founders/Funds and Entrepreneurs

With VCs sitting on a record $223 billion of dry powder and ongoing digital transformation creating a hotbed for further disruption, it is unlikely the current entrepreneurship trend will fade anytime soon.

The entrepreneurial scene globally is booming! How the boom in global entrepreneurs is boosting private markets | Campden FB

Family offices were among the beneficiaries of this entrepreneurial boom, last year netting returns of 24% through VC investments, according to SVB Capital. A survey from EY India at the end of last year showed that family offices and ultra-high-net-worth individuals have been ramping up their allocations to private markets, with 18% of those assets invested in start-ups and VC funds. According to the survey, the top reason for investing in start-ups was the returns on offer (82% of respondents), followed by innovation and tech (53%).
